A Happy Solution

Many of the vexatious family financial troubles could be eliminated through the exercise of a little forethought.

For example: every family has certain necessary expenditures to make during the year such as those for clothes, food, taxes, insurance, charity, entertainment, etc.

If an estimate was made of the probable total of these items and, at least once each month, a proportion was taken from income sufficient to pay one-twelfth of the total, bills would become less burdensome, prompt payments could be made, and the necessity of keeping within the family income would be reflected in increased family savings.

This simple program would avoid many of the complications and details of so-called "savings clubs" and could be carried out without inconvenience to the depositor.

Already hundreds of depositors come to the bank regularly with a part of their earnings saved in pursuance of this plan.

You may style it, if you please, the Common Sense Savings System. There is no novelty about the scheme; it is simply the application of sound sense to the problem of home economy.

4 per cent interest is allowed on your money from the first of each month.

The Ulster parliament decides to wear its own and will let the remainder of Ireland put on whatever garb it wants to.

The spread of the spirit of lawlessness does not confine itself by any means to infraction of the statute laws. There's the lawlessness which takes matters into its own hands, decides a man is guilty and gives punishment in the manner which appeals most strongly to the whims of the punishers. That's just as much lawlessness as the action of the criminal in attacking a man on the highway or committing some other crime or misdemeanor. Action of a trio of masked men in punishing an alleged wife-beater at Fort Worth, Texas, is an illustration.

In sentencing the young bandit, George Mills, to the state prison for the maximum term of ten years, Judge Butler asserted that the young man had been described as more or less of an adventurer but intimated that that was only a small part of the story. The other, and major, part of the story was that in carrying out his ventures the young man had ridden, roughshod, over the laws of Vermont and of neighboring states, besides showing utter disregard for the rights of the people he came in contact with. Hence, Judge Butler sentenced the young bandit to the maximum term, much as he regretted to be compelled to do because of the respondent's youthfulness. In view of the apparent lack of self-restraint by the young man it seems the best course to pursue to keep him for a considerable period where he will have a chance to get a changed perspective on life; to come, perhaps, to a realization that we are not living in an age when one's own will is law.

Referring to revelations of unsatisfactory conditions in Burlington as regards law enforcement, the Bennington Banner says that conditions in Burlington are by no means peculiar to that city, that Bennington itself has had "scores of burglaries, robberies and thefts" which are "occurring with almost daily regularity"; that distilleries, formerly operated on the outskirts, have moved into the village and "are running on some of the principal streets," that "prostitution was never so open in Bennington as now and a half dozen houses of ill fame are running in and around the village while personal solicitation goes on unchecked every day and evening" and that boys and girls of high school age attending dances "seem to be able to buy liquor just as easily as the hardened toper." The Bennington contemporary certainly has shown no disposition to cover up his town's misdoings in a general way; perhaps if the generalities turn into his specific allegations there will be a marked improvement for the better. It is the same with any community. General-ties do not get far. If such goings on are so well known in Bennington there ought to be enough evidence to secure convictions. The Banner has started things off well by calling attention to the supposed conditions. There ought to be action now.

Should Have $50,000 Pension.

Norwood, N. Y., March 6, 1903.

A. J. Phillips, Norwood, N. Y.:

My dear sir: You should have a pension of fifty thousand dollars per year for inventing and putting on the market the wonderful remedy so well known as the Famous A. J. P. Rheumatic Cure. I have been laid up in bed and suffered all kinds of torments. All remedies that I ever took before were like water to me until I took the A. J. P. Rheumatic Cure, which has taken the pain out of me and now I am out again.

Thanks to you.
